Three Sisters Of Mrs. Mills To Face Jury

Expected to Give Details of Her Love Affair With Rector to Back State's Firm Theory of Jealousy

Hints of Confession Given

Indictments Sought, but Not More Than 2 Expected, Says Aid to Mott

From a Staff Correspondent NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 24.-Wifely love and jealousy at cross purproceedings in Somerville next week when Prosecutor Wilbur A. Mott resumes his presentation of the evidence in the Hall-Mills case. At least half a dozen of the witnesses scheduled to appear on Monday will tell of incidents they observed tween the Rev. Edward W. Hall and his white-haired wife. Some of this testimony will come straight from the Hell home, where there was more oprtunity to notice signs of friction. Mrs. Jane Gibson, with her story of appenings on the night of the crime, is being deliberately withheld until all the testimony bearing on motive for the crime has been put forward. While Mrs. Hall, by her own declaration, insists that she can think of no reason for the murder of Mrs. Eleanor R. Mills and her husband, the authorities are firmly convinced that, whether premeditated or carried ut in a gust of passion, the act had its origin in the gnawing canker of jealousy.

To Call Mrs. Mills's Three Sisters To call Mrs. Mills's Three Sisters To support their theory they will present to the grand jury three of Mrs.
Mills's sisters—Mrs. Elsie Barnhardt, of Newark; Mrs. John Reid, of Highland Park, and Mrs. Ed Tenneson, of New Brunswick—all of whom are supposed to have known of their sister's love affair.

The keenest interest is felt in the appearance of Mrs. Minnie Clarke and Ralph V. N. Gorsline before the grand jury. Mrs. Clarke is the member of the congregation accused by Mrs. Mills in eongregation accused by Mrs. Mills in one of her letters to the rector of putting flowers in his prayer book, a rite which she considered sacred to herself. Both Mrs. Clarke and Gorsline are supposed to have known of what was going on between the rector and was going on between the rector and was going on between the rector and choir singer.

In this connection the local paper indicated to-day that people here are keyed up for a confession of some kind. The following editorial comment was prominently displayed:

"It is the power of some one to make a clean breast and confession in the Hall-Mills murder case. Confession would be good for some souls and would lift a burden from a very tired public."

Letter Urges Confession

Asked How Wife Treated Him According to the authorities, Mrs. Wills cultivated Louise Geist and became friendly with her through the common meeting ground of the church guild. Louise cooled off, however, when she found that Mrs. Mills was inquisitive about the relationship existing quisitive about the relationship existing between Mr. and Mrs. Hall. According to the girl's story as told to the authori-ties, Mrs. Mills would often say to her:

"How does Mrs. Hall treat the rector? Isn't she cold toward him?"
Resentful of this as an impertinence,

Mrs. Mills then transferred her campaign to Barbara Tough, the sturdy Scotch seamstress. She cultivated her in the same way as she did Louise. Louise, it developed to-day, was the last person to speak to Mr. Hall at his home on the night of the murder. She was standing on the Redmond Street side of the garden, near the garage, during Hall's examination by Henry W. Sykes, attorney for the trustee in

Appeal for Assistance

"You boys had better go ahead and fail," Morse told them in February, when they made their last appeal to him to redeem his promise that he would come to their asistance if things got too bad. They had been appealing to Morse for two or three months, Hall said, but he told them a few days before the bankruptcy that they were in such bad shape nothing could save them.

The day after the failure, Hall continued, Morse disappeared. He has a residence at 788 Riverside Drive, Hall said, but could not be found there. A couple of weeks later Morse reappeared, but is now missing again, according to Hall. Hall had $20,000 capital when he took over the business and total liabilities of $371,000. Deducting the capital and about $80,000 paid by Morse against the $200,000 of accounts, Hall said the firm was about $100,000 in debt at the beginning.
